Often we post articles about deforestation. Most of the issues are large scale. What we sometimes miss is that most issues involve tree farm licences and some small communities generally are adversely affected by the loss of nature and a beautiful community. So here is one I thought to mention. Cumberland is a nice community on Vancouver Island. The community has been trying to protect a buffer of forest around their town from deforestation. They are hosting an event that will showcase some of the values of this forest by holding the First Annual Fungus Fest.

Guest speakers, online presentations and virtual pubs, guided walks (day and night), art projects, ethnobotany and more!

Your $25 ticket unlocks a program of online and real world events and curious links for your fungi pleasure.
